

DECEMBER 2017

Harman Wealth Market Bulletin

Tax Reform is on the Way for 2018. What's Next for Markets?

AUTHOR

Christopher Riggs, JD, CFP®

Christopher Riggs leads portfolio strategy and research for Harman Wealth Management. He writes extensively about the economy and markets. His responsibilities include macroeconomic analysis, portfolio construction, and leading the HWM investment committee.

... it's critical for investors to suspend political biases and see the Tax Cut and Jobs Act with an unobstructed view.

...Let this be clear: the most impactful elements of the Tax Cut and Jobs Act are about improving America's competitiveness for corporate investment and growth.

By clearing the Senate early December 2nd, the Tax Cut and Jobs Act (TCJA) is well on its way to becoming law. While the bill must still proceed to reconciliation and a revote, it's time to assess the impact to the economy and markets in 2018.

After passing the Senate by a narrow margin of 51-49 on December 2nd, the Tax Cut and Jobs Act (TCJA) is well on its way to becoming law. While the bill must still proceed to reconciliation, delivering the bill to the White House for a ceremonious signing is likely a formality from here.

Most Americans will either applaud or denounce with the passage depending upon who they voted for last election. However, it is important not to confuse politics with investing. While tempting to think this way, it's critical for investors to suspend political biases and see the Tax Cut and Jobs Act with an unobstructed view.

What follows is a quick summary of the big issues investors should be aware of when assessing the potential impact to markets in 2018.

Focus on Corporate Tax Reform

Although most headlines focus on changes to personal income tax provisions, let this be clear: the most impactful elements of the Tax Cut and Jobs Act are about improving America's competitiveness for corporate investment and growth.

In response to the widely accepted narrative that America had long lost its competitiveness in a global marketplace, the TCJA makes three substantial changes to corporate taxes.

1. Lowers the Corporate Income Tax Rate from 35% to 20%.

The change moves the U.S. corporate tax rate from last amongst our top 5 trading partners to first. Such a move should slow the rate of corporate inversions, whereby companies re-incorporate abroad to reduce their tax burden.

2. Taxation on Multinational Corporations moves to a "Territorial" System.

The TCJA removes a major inhibitor for corporations to bring home and reinvest foreign profits domestically.

3. Full Expensing for Capital Investment in the First Five Years.

The TCJA offers accelerated deductibility for capital investments, providing extra incentives for U.S. businesses to invest in growth in the near term.

What About Changes to Personal Taxes?

When addressing personal income taxes, the overarching theme was geared toward simplifying taxes while eliminating special interest deductions.

What it means is that many Americans will see a lower tax bracket; however, they will also be losing some of their favorite deductions. In the end, much of it will be a wash, with the TCJA loaded with off-setting changes. Ultimately, the net effect likely leads to a lower tax burden for low- and middle-income households while higher earning households will likely see an increase.

...lower corporate rates can take what was already expected to be a solid year and propel it to an even better year.

So, What's the Significance for My Portfolio?

While the objectives of the TCJA were aimed at long-term structural improvements, investors should refine their near-term focus.

Theme #1: Increased Corporate Profits in 2018.

According to Factset¹, the consensus outlook in 2018 for S&P 500 companies is to grow earnings by 11.1% and revenue by 5.4%. Those assumptions were made without accounting for a reduced tax rate. Therefore, lower corporate rates can take what was already expected to be a solid year and propel it to an even better year.

Theme #2: Putting Profits to Work.

Should U.S. corporations realize improved earnings or see repatriated foreign profits, then the next question leads to how they will put those profits to work. Four main activities emerge, all of which appear initially positive for markets.

- Capital Reinvestment.
- Increasing Dividends.
- Share Buybacks.
- Increased Wages.

Theme #3: Increased Consumption.

Most middle-income Americans will see their reduced tax burden through an increase in their paycheck. Lowering tax bracket rates should convert to lower withholding amounts. Therefore, a tax reduction should feel like a pay increase and will likely be treated as expendable income.

Caution, Not Without Potential Problems

Achieving passage of the tax bill by year-end means 2018 certainly starts with a positive outlook. However, it doesn't mean the economy will move forward without facing challenges. On a number of fronts, caution is still warranted.

Caution #1: The Expansion is Getting Too Long.

From an economic lens, the timing of the tax reform seems precarious. After all, markets are presently in the second longest bull market run record and valuations are near historical highs.

Caution #2: The Fed Hastens Rate Hikes.

The Fed's record shows they are not favorably pre-disposed to the tax cut. After all, the economy is already at full employment and in little need of a near-term stimulus.

In the Fed's view, urgent reform should have been devoted to reducing the Federal deficit; instead, the deficit expands under the TCJA. Moreover, adding too much fuel to a mature expansion could be inflationary and may force the Fed to tighten at a steadier pace.

Caution #3: Lack of Reinvestment.

Let's face it, a lot of big, cash-rich corporations have simply chosen not to make capital investments during this expansion. Furthermore, a study from the Congressional Research Service on repatriation incentives in 2004 showed little evidence that repatriated profits led to new capital investment.²

While tax cuts may justify an optimistic tilt for 2018, savvy investors would be wise to remain diligent and nimble as well.

Concluding Thoughts

In a world of insufficient growth, nationalism now manifests itself through competition for corporate dollars. The TCJA makes a bold move to tip the scale back in favor of the U.S., but, it likely won't be received favorably by its trading partners. Already, European and Chinese leaders have vocalized displeasure with the TCJA, and may consider countering with policy responses of their own.

We continue to view the global economy as a complex and dynamic eco-system. When significant changes occur, the effects naturally ripple through the whole eco-system and may elicit unintended responses. While tax cuts may justify an optimistic tilt for 2018, savvy investors would be wise to remain diligent and nimble at this stage of the business cycle.

Sources:

¹ FactSet Earnings Insight, December 1, 2017

² J. Gravelle and D. J. Marples. "Tax Cuts on Repatriation Earnings as Economic Stimulus: An Economic Analysis," Congressional Research Service, December 20, 2011.

Interested in Adaptive Business Cycle Investing?

Today's markets, economies, and policies are more complex than ever, challenging investors on what to watch and when to take action.

At Harman Wealth Management, we understand sound investments are uniquely supported by the conditions that favor them. Likewise, when conditions change, so do the investments that benefit.

That's why we conduct rigorous and disciplined tracking of the U.S. business cycle. We also track the cyclical factors that shape our investing environment, like currencies, commodities, and rates. We embrace a world where investing dynamics are constantly evolving and believe it's imperative to have an investment strategy that adapts with it.

With Adaptive Business Cycle Investing, we invest consistent with business cycle forces. We aim to align investments with the conditions driving returns in the present, rather than chasing what worked in the past.

About Harman Wealth Management

At Harman Wealth Management, we provide private, advanced, independent planning and investment management to individuals, families, and institutional clients.

We value in-depth economic research, evidence-based investment methods, and rigorous risk management. We are committed to integrative advanced planning by aligning investment objectives with business cycle opportunities and risks.

At Harman Wealth Management, our aim is to help clients realize their goals within a disciplined, insightful, and rewarding relationship.

For more information about Harman Wealth Management or investing with the business cycle, contact us at 281-719-8601.

Disclosures:

It is our goal to help investors by identifying changing market conditions. However, investors should be aware that no financial advisor can accurately predict all of the changes that may occur in the market. Information is based on sources believed to be reliable; however, their accuracy or completeness cannot be guaranteed.

Investing involves risk including the potential loss of principal. No investment strategy can guarantee a profit or protect against loss in periods of declining values. Past performance is no guarantee of future results. There is no guarantee that a diversified portfolio will outperform a non-diversified portfolio in any given market environment.

Please note that individual situations can vary. Therefore, the information presented here should only be relied upon when coordinated with individual professional advice.

The Standard and Poor's 500 is an unmanaged index generally representative of the U.S. stock market and cannot be invested in directly.

In general, the bond market is volatile as prices rise when interest rates fall and vice versa. This effect is usually pronounced for longer-term securities. Any fixed income security sold or redeemed prior to maturity may be subject to a substantial gain or loss. Bonds are also subject to other types of risks such as call, credit, liquidity, interest rate, and general market risks.

Securities and advisory services offered through SagePoint Financial, Inc., member FINRA/SIPC. Harman Wealth Management is a marketing designation. SagePoint Financial, Inc., does not provide any tax or legal advice. Economic research and analysis provided by Alphalytics Research, which is not affiliated with SagePoint Financial, Inc.